

Call for Associate Editor of Agriculture and Human Values

Agriculture and Human Values is the journal of the Agriculture, Food, and Human Values Society. The journal, like the Society, is dedicated to an open and free discussion of the values that shape and the structures that underlie current and alternative visions of food and agricultural systems.

To this end the journal publishes interdisciplinary research that critically examines the values, relationships, conflicts, and contradictions within contemporary agricultural and food systems and that addresses the impact of agricultural and food-related institutions, policies, and practices on human populations, the environment, democratic governance, and social equity.

The Society is seeking applications for an Associate Editor of Agriculture and Human Values. The Associate Editor will work closely with the Editor, Harvey James, in managing the journal and editorial process.

Specific responsibilities may include, but not necessarily be limited to, the following:

1. Evaluating submitted papers for suitability and appropriateness.
2. Identifying and inviting reviewers to evaluate submitted papers.
3. Making editorial decisions on submitted papers, including rejection, revision, or acceptance of papers, based on own reading and recommendations and reports of reviewers.

5. Recommending and recruiting scholars to serve on the journal's editorial board.
6. Preparing and submitting to Springer the table of contents, including the assignment of regular papers, articles in symposia, book reviews, and books received list.
7. Evaluating proposed special issue editions for appropriateness and working with their editors on planned paper collections.
